‘Pam and Malcolm Fifty-Seven Years Later—It is Never Too Late’ shares a tells true story of love that defied time

BEND, Ore. – In a world often focused on first chances and fleeting connections, “Pam and Malcolm Fifty-Seven Years Later—It is Never Too Late” (published by WestBow Press) offers a rare and deeply moving reminder that love can endure time, distance, and life’s many detours. Written by Malcolm C. Turzak, this memoir recounts an extraordinary real-life love story that began in the 1960s, went dormant for 57 years, and was rekindled by a single phone call in January 2023.

Pam and Malcolm first met as college students during a turbulent era marked by education, ambition and the Vietnam War. Though they knew they were right for each other, circumstances made a lasting relationship impossible. They went on to live full, separate lives — building careers, families, and enduring profound personal losses — never expecting their paths to cross again.

That changed more than half a century later when Malcolm set out to find Pam, unsure if she would even remember him. What followed was nothing short of miraculous. Their reconnection ignited a renewed love rooted not in youthful idealism, but in deep emotional understanding. From Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, to Bend, Oregon, the author chronicles the emotional rediscovery of companionship, trust, and shared purpose. The story moves beyond nostalgia, focusing instead on what it means to love with maturity, gratitude, and intention later in life.

“Our love story that took place in the 1960s. At that time, the appropriate phrase to describe our relationship was ‘Right Person, Wrong Time.’ In 2023, the phrase was ‘Right Person Right time,’” Turzak states.

“Pam and Malcolm Fifty-Seven Years Later—It Is Never Too Late” is intended for readers drawn to true stories of enduring connection and second chances. This memoir aims to remind readers that love is never out of date and that so long as love exists in their heart, it is never too late.

About the Author

Malcolm C. Turzak began to write and develop the foundation while working for Westinghouse Electric Corporation as an internal auditor in 1969. Over the next 40 years working for Fortune 500 companies, the need to write became a necessity as well as a blessing. Writing “Pam and Malcolm Fifty-Seven Years Later” provided the opportunity to tell his story. As a significant and main character in the book, Pam encouraged him to write this beautiful story. Just as important, the story is for those who have love in their heart, reminding them that “It is Never too Late.”
